

John T. Anderson is a recently retired automotive executive with over 33 years working in the industry on automotive public policy issues related to investment and trade strategies, environmental and safety issues and the development of autonomous vehicles. Mr. Anderson most recently served as Vice President of Government Affairs for Kia Motors Corporation directing federal and state government relations and building Kia's brand presence in Washington, D.C. During his tenure at Kia's Washington office, Anderson was on the Board of Directors for Global Automakers, a trade and policy organization representing international auto companies and component suppliers.

Prior to working with Kia, Mr. Anderson spent 15 years working for General Motors in Washington, D.C., Detroit, Buffalo and Singapore where he was part of the start-up team for a spin-off company known as Delphi Automotive. He worked for Delphi for a decade in Asia and Washington, D.C on international automotive policy issues. During his time at Delphi, he served on the Asia Pacific Strategy Board and the Border Trade Alliance working on trade issues relative to NAFTA. He also served as an advisor to the U.S. Department of Commerce on international trade issues relating to the automotive business. Mr. Anderson is a native of Michigan and a graduate of Michigan State University and attended the Thunderbird University International Management Program. He and his wife Joanna live in Alexandria, Virginia and spend quality time at a family house in New Hampshire.